Dear Noble Training,

Re – Our thanks for supporting Honours Psychology student and construction suicide prevention research

On behalf of Griffith University's Australian Institute for Suicide Research and Prevention (AISRAP), I would like to sincerely thank Paul Simmons from Noble Group for supporting Honours student Jack Ladewig's research by providing industry insights and circulating his survey link through the enrolment pages for students undertaking civil, construction and apprenticeship courses.

Jack's study, Meaning in Life as a Protective Factor Against Suicidal Ideation Among Construction Workers, explores how meaning in life may serve as a protective factor against suicidal ideation among workers in the Australian construction industry. The research is being conducted under my supervision and has received Griffith University Human Research Ethics approval (GU Ref No. HREC/2026/0462).

Your assistance will help Jack reach a broad and relevant group of construction workers and apprentices, strengthening this important research and its potential contribution to suicide prevention within the industry.

We greatly appreciate Paul's generosity and support.

Warm regards,

Jacinta Hawgood BSSc, BPsy(Hons), MClinPsy, PhD, MAPS, MICDA
